Technology's Impact on SLPs: The New World of Speech-Language Therapy

by Howard Goode and Elana Shinkle, MA, CCC-SLP | Dec 30, 2019

Traditionally, the job of an SLP (Speech-Language Pathologist) was relatively easy to define. Drawing upon her education and experience, the SLP would prep, spend an hour or so with her client focusing upon the particular deficit that needed help, and deliver the appropriate therapy. After the post-session notes, it would be on to the next client.
